of Religious Science globally by offering workshops and consulting services aimed at strengthening individual churches.

Stepping in to the ministerial position on a temporary basis, Linda Potter is a licensed Religious Science Practitioner and has served as the Ecclesiastical Manifestation Corps head for the church while teaching Science of Mind classes and filling in for Reverend John on Sundays on a regular basis. Gregory Long, Pamela Robinson, and John Leisenring will continue to anchor the Whole Life Band for the celebratory Sunday services.

VOLUNTEER HEALERS SOUGHT FOR AIDS PROJECT

As part of gathering the preliminary data for a medical study to show the effectiveness of energy healing conducted by groups of energy healers in the Front Range area, volunteer healers are sought to work on AIDS patients in a group setting out of the Northern Colorado AIDS Project.

To participate, volunteer healers must have professional training and experience in any hands-on energy healing modality. Acupuncture and sound and crystal healing modalities are not part of this study. A willingness and intent to participate in a group modality for healing purposes is necessary. The goal of this study is to create a community of group-oriented healers geared toward working with the chronically ill on a professional basis. Participating healers will be required to attend three training sessions and will be asked to work approximately one four-hour time period per month at the Northern Colorado AIDS project in Fort Collins.

For more information or to sign up as a volunteer, please contact Glenn Kamamura at 303-984-9606 or Mindy de Marmion at 303-709-1822.

DEMARMION ANNOUNCES WEBSITE FOR FEMININE MANDALAS

Mindy DeMarmion, artist, healer and activist in Berthoud, has announced that her special collection of symbols and Divine Feminine Mandalas can now be seen on her web site at www.plutonicLLC.com/paradigmalchemy. Her Divine Feminine posters and book of the Divine Feminine Meditations are also available on this site.

DESIGNER FOODS AVAILABLE FOR RETAIL OUTLETS

The Whole Food Farmacy has announced its Nature's PanTree program, making their line of natural foods, Ascential Oils, and personal care products available to retail outlets such as health food stores, gyms, holistic clinics or kiosk vendors. Retailers can purchase the products at wholesale without any requirement to become a network marketing distributor. Visit www.healingpath.wholefoodfarmacy.com for more details.

Other designer food companies (see the article in the July/Aug. issue titled Evolution in Designer Foods) are also adopting this mode. ForeverGreen recently announced a Professional Program that allows retail sales by chiropractors, spas, health food stores and others. For details, contact Mary Raymond at Makay@healingpath.com.

House Healing with Heidi

HEIDI PETERSEN

Surprisingly, a palpable, unspoken emptiness lingers in the home of two self-aware, successful and creative women. The emptiness can be characterized as a “not enough” or a “maybe someday” quality that makes their life experiences, including their achievements, secondary to their striving. In their attempt to satiate the emptiness through their ongoing activity — and as a reflection of their incredible creativity — these women have filled this house, as well as a second mountain home, with things that are a reflection of past events. Their overflowing creativity has produced acquisitions that are now a hindrance to them, representing more of a burden than a joy. At this point, instead of celebrating their prolific ability to create, they hold their creations against themselves. They suspect that their creativity is the cause of their feelings of emptiness, and hence, they have begun to wrap their creativity in a blanket of shame.

However, an outpouring of creative energy is an expression of life in action; it is hardly shameful. Instead, the emptiness is a by-product of these women’s lack of recognition and appreciation of all of their creative output. They have so embraced the journey that they have yet to integrate the many, varied destinations through which they have traveled to arrive at their present location.

In itself, the ability to appreciate their accomplishments, as well as their acquisitions, will not fill their void. However, it is a first step toward the development of the larger ability to recognize how our experiences, whether we deem them good or bad, contribute to the enrichment of our life. Our experiences are the many colors we splash across our canvas; they unleash our vibrancy.

My clients have not stepped back to see a wide-angle view of the colorful lives they have created. While a mere glimpse of the canvas in present time would overwhelm the emptiness, they fear that if they cease their striving, they will realize that their creative gifts have been for naught — that the emptiness is bigger than their experiences and beyond their abilities. Of course, like many fears, this one has no basis in truth. However, it fuels the striving that prevents their confrontation of the looming sense of emptiness.

Constant striving has deprived these women of the joy of completion. It is the recognition of completion that allows the integration of an experience, and hence, the ability to release it. In other words, when these women are willing to risk facing the void and let go of their striving, they will be rewarded for their courage with a vision of the beauty of their creations in present time. That vision will allow them the clarity that they are seeking to know how to release the overflow and excess that is no longer serving them.

It is from this place of seeing ourselves clearly in present time that we can make choices about our next right step, as well as how our house can best care for us.
